

First of, we thought what could we give to the world if we did this project, and then we realized that the world has so many opportunities to change it to a better place and all it needs are minor hands, and we thought we can help. We had to plan out everything, how we wanted it to work, how it would affect us positively and what we would gain from this, we realized that we were not helping ourselves but helping the neighborhood, helping the needful, showing that we cannot wait for anyone to change the world. We can.

We partnered up with our school students and teachers, we helped tell them about why poverty needs to stop, especially in Nigeria. We collaborated with our teachers to help get funds and donations to children without education to place them in well developed schools and institutions.

We majorly focused on the first global goal called “No Poverty” We chose this one because in Nigeria it is a major problem and needs to be solved.

We have tried diverse ways to increase awareness about No Poverty but one of the ways we are proud of is our blog.

Our blog has helped a lot of people to know about us and our ways of helping, we specifically included our blog with who we are, how we came about it, where we are now, frequently asked questions and more to educate them about poverty.

In this opportunity we have learnt that helping the world is not as easy as it seems, you must really work hard to meet your goals, you must make sure that you are heard of to have influence, and we have really gone over expectations to reach that.

One of our biggest challenges was trying to move around while following Covid-19 rules, it was hard to see each other apart from when we saw at school, we were limited to do as much as we wanted at home but we pushed harder and we have gotten here ready to help the world and make it a better place.
